 - In North India, temples were built in the Nagara style, whereas in South India, the Dravidian style took hold.

➤ The main distinctions between temples built in the Nagara and Dravidian styles are –

Area of Difference	Nagara Style	Dravida Style
Location	Temples located in Northern India are listed as Nagara style. (SSS MTS, 02-11-2021)	Temples located in Southern India are listed as Dravida style.
Main temples spire	Nagara style of architecture has multiple shikharas (Const. Delhi Police 2023)	Dravida style has one single shikhara.
Mandapa Towers	In the Nagara style, there are multiple Towers.	In Dravida style, there is always a single Tower.
Central Tower	In Nagara style, the central tower is curvilinear in shape.	In Dravida style, the central tower is shaped like a pyramid.
Boundaries and deities	Nagara style does not give much importance to the temple boundaries, and the deities are kept inside.	In this style, the temple boundaries are given high importance, and the deities are kept outside.
	Temples constructed in the Nagara architectural style are constructed on a platform. These temples lack any boundary walls or entrances as well. The mandaps are built in front of the primary Shrine. There aren't any water reservoirs like there are in Dravidian-style temples. The Ganga and Yamuna visuals are actually encrypted. The curvilinear tower and the cruciform ground plan are this style's two defining features. Sun Temple in Konark, Lakshman Temple in Khajuraho, Kandariya Mahadeva Temple, etc. are some examples of temples constructed in the Nagara style.	The earliest architectural style, the Dravidian style has numerous unique characteristics. The majority of these temple designs have short pillars, as well as boundary walls and doorways. Dravidian-style temples are enclosed by a wall. The entrance is a Gopuram. (SSC MTS 2023) (SSC CHSL 2023) (Const. Delhi Police 2023) Dvarapalas are positioned to protect the entrance in temples built in the Dravidian architecture. The crucial elements of these temples, present in each one, are the water reservoirs. The Kailashnath temples in Ellora and Brihadeshwara temple are examples of temples constructed in the Dravidian style. 'Vrittayata' is a major sub-division of Dravidian style of temple architecture. (Const. Delhi Police 2023)
